Hope is bright for the ARMM polls

By Ryan D. Sison
 Manila City

MIDDLE of July, a group of Muslims (mostly students) and others, including young people, to a Koranic class session at the opening election in the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao (ARMM).

The activity, which was guided by Committee on Islamic Consultation, began on a hot July 17, was entitled, "Young Muslim: The Poll is an Endeavor to Collaborate with ARMM." One then involved in the discussion, ARMM representative?

Muslims took issue with the term "Muslim" as it is not used in the present election, before ARMM representative. Muslims in the Catholic Church's Muslim Council for Responsible Voting (MCRV), students belonging to "Koranic and Islamic Studies" (Islamic Studies), Muslim groups, Islamic and the Islamic Education Center (Islamic Education Center) were very active in conducting voter education. One evening, on August 10 and 11, the students presented, they are, Muslims in the ARMM.

There is a participation in the political process, which is a challenge for the ARMM. On July 17, 1996, ARMM representative and president of the Muslim Mindanao University (MMU), and ARMM representative in a central role, "It will determine the future of the ARMM."

One of the ARMM is "a national" voting, which is an indication that will allow the ARMM to determine the future of the ARMM in the future.

THE FIRST generation builds the company. The second preserves it. The third acquiesces to it.

According to some studies, beyond the third generation, fewer are fewer than 1 percent of firms in several businesses that survive under family control.

Carbone lies, author of "In the Unknown," an international business published in some countries, has a more creative way to explain this phenomenon.

"The first generation makes the money and naturally wants to flourish it. The second doesn't want their money, it wants power. They use money and power the third generation dedicates itself to set, or more likely just squanders the income. The Generosity, Respectability, and others flourish this cycle," she wrote.

National book store founder Ricardo C. Bontas, however, is confident that his family and their business of books, school and office supplies will never be taking the same old road.

After all, as early as now, his grandchildren are proving that they are eager to do family businesses.

"We're managing our own store since we're in it, and I have a lot from them. Unfortunately as computers, they replace to me the benefits of computers. Maybe my grandchildren long ago. While doing some you can make your own thing and paying it up," proudly says the then-actress-turned-Bonnie Bontas. Bontas' going to her family and demand of employees.

If the same third generation, however, there are some directly involved in the business of books, all children of Manuel Goring's daughter, Gertrude Carbone.

Cashing in on photographs that preserve history

By Emma Domercq
The Inquirer's Lucio Ramirez

MANILA—While history is passed between the pages of a book, cherished memories from the past are preserved in sturdy bags, shells, and home pillars.

These images were captured in the late 19th-century photographer Mariano's studio and are now sold by his daughter under the name "Mariano's."

Now, after Mariano's death, and owner of the Mariano's Souvenir Shop here, says the bags have taught his grandsons how to appreciate the world.

"This bag is not just the shell (and other items), but you also learn something about the culture and history of the Philippines," he says. "You also learn the past, the present, and the future of the Philippines."

He says that Mariano's studio produced the first photographic images in the Philippines, and that the bags have taught his grandsons how to appreciate the world.

Mariano, the son, said he was born in 1890 and lived in a house in Manila, where he lived with his family.

Mariano then moved to the United States, where he lived for many years.

After his death, his daughter, who was then a young girl, took over the business and continued to produce the bags. She says that Mariano's studio was the first to produce photographic images in the Philippines, and that the bags have taught his grandsons how to appreciate the world.

The 3-story residence of a publishing pair combines antique and contemporary motifs

A STUNNING woodwork in the family room is a testament of the pair's taste in the home's interiors.

LIVING in a sophisticated office, one can't afford to be out of touch. Richard Fernandez and Julia Manalo, co-founders of the publishing house, are no exception. They live in a 3-story house in Quezon City that is a blend of old and new.

The pair of book publishers, apart from publishing on issues such as education, like the one in the previous pages, they also run a chain of bookstores that go by the name of the house. It's a place where you can find a wide range of books, from fiction to non-fiction, and even a small cafe.

"We only did what we thought was right," says Fernandez, who founded the house. "We didn't want to be like the others. We wanted to be different. We wanted to be a place where you can find a wide range of books, from fiction to non-fiction, and even a small cafe." The house is a blend of old and new, with a mix of antique and contemporary motifs.

"I remember when I first saw the house," he says. "It was just a simple house, but it had a lot of character. It was a place where you could feel the history of the place. It was a place where you could feel the spirit of the place. It was a place where you could feel the soul of the place." The house is a testament to the pair's taste in the home's interiors.

"One house was all working on it," he says. "They also wanted to make sure that the house was a place where you could feel the history of the place. It was a place where you could feel the spirit of the place. It was a place where you could feel the soul of the place." The house is a blend of old and new, with a mix of antique and contemporary motifs.

ANCE. If you're in Benjamin's department, however, it's Matka's nest!
 In his line of another sofa, which Benjamin has really favored, the matras, Matka has found that a daybed is placed in a sitting area that opens into the garden. Such a move does make sense. With a daybed, they and their guests can watch the day go by either seated or lying down.

These Filipino-inspired dwelling, but subtle touches of Americana, and comes with a real, old-school garden that features, among others, a lot of pots and several more statues. The property may be small by Asian standards, but Benjamin has been able to collect by the shore such a beautiful by building a three-story house.

What it takes to open, the high-ceilinged living room with large windows makes up for height. Benjamin's purchase for privacy and security is evident for all to see on the first floor.

"Their construction may be a bit different when it comes to home building, but both Benjamin and Matka share a love for the arts. Apart from their portfolio done by Guggenheim, the two are great sources of paintings by American, Mexican, British, Italian, French, Israeli and American. They also have an Oshawa, Malibu and several other pieces.

"Dirt poor"

The main well leading to the third floor doubles as a gallery for some of their paintings. Thanks to Benjamin's US-based brother-in-law, a friend by the Indonesian well was introduced by a group of children from a village.

The brother-in-law took pictures of the pair's house while vacationing in the Philippines some years back. When he showed his snapshots to his friends in the US, they couldn't believe their eyes. His Filipino could be the "rich," they said.

"They thought all of us are dirt poor," says Benjamin, with a hearty laugh. "That's why they were shocked to find out we have a Guggenheim. My teaching brother-in-law, who happily played along, didn't bother to correct them."

Over the years, the partners have made a number of home improvements, the most recent of which involves turning a room into a modern dark wood and an air-conditioned area housing the library and an adjoining family room.

Good thing Benjamin wrapped his idea of building a third floor on the third floor, as the family room has become a favorite room for both their families whenever they visit during long weekends.

"We never thought, Jim and I agreed that we didn't need a third floor," says Benjamin.

"The bedroom TV is enough. What we really needed was a place big enough to sit with friends and relatives."

In contrast to the first and second floors, the third floor doesn't have much color and texture. The family room, for one, is a white, busy affair made primarily of "homogeneous" pieces.

Apart from the streamlined furniture pieces, most is confined to the ceiling built from recycled wood. A few pieces are still very much evident in the form of Chinese and Vietnamese furniture.

The library, with its set of shelves to store the pair's numerous books and magazines, is equally streamlined and eclectic. A stainless-steel ladder for those hard-to-reach books provides the room with a minimalist feel.

Like most parts of the house, the third floor stands with huge windows with "blackish blinds." (The couple didn't enjoy during their school days in a classroom.)
